An Apricus solar hot water system is made up of evacuated tube solar collectors, a storage tank/hot water heater, a gas or electric booster and a solar controller and pump. We install the storage tank/hot water heater on the ground and the solar collectors are attached to the roof. The system uses a solar controller and pump to transfer cold ...

The cold supply is fed into the solar tank, and the solar tank outlet feeds the cold inlet of the main tank. Having a dedicated volume of water for the solar to heat eliminates competition from the existing energy source, which would happen if the tank was also heated by electricity, gas etc (unless timer or manual boosting control is used).

Solar collector performance variables can be used to promote the "performance" of a solar collector, in particular the peak efficiency value is used. A value of 60-80% is common for most thermal solar collectors, but this value needs to be taken with a grain of salt, with the surface area it is based on considered.

The Apricus evacuated tubes receive >20% more solar exposure compared to a flat absorber, allowing more solar energy conversion to heat each day. The passive tracking feature also allows the collector to be installed at directions East or West of equator pointing (North or South) without too much reduction in output.
