On your first question, although I'm not a keen shell collector, don't think Bermuda is too well known for seashells. In fact the chances of finding unbroken seashells on the south shore beaches are quite low. Sometimes you will find broken shells and that too of small sizes (like that of a quarter). ...

this is a very basic explanation of where bermuda beach sand comes from. To make pink Bermuda beach sand you need all of the following - parrot fish, sea cucumbers, live coral reef, red foraminifera (foram for short). Starting with coral - parrot fish clean excess algae off of the coral reef.
