The offensive launched by Syrian opposition forces on November 27 has yielded an unprecedented shift in Syria's stalemate that normalization efforts exerted over the past year have been unable to achieve. For years, Syria has been stuck in a deadlock, with Bashar Al-Assad's regime, the root cause of devastation, still in power.

Turkish president Recep Tayyip Erdogan was quick to claim that holding elections in Syria would threaten Turkey's national security. And on May 31, Turkey launched drone strikes against a Kurdish Red Crescent ambulance, among other targets, killing four people. Earlier this year, a wave of Turkish strikes targeted oil refineries, water stations, and ...

The sanctions, which apply to Syrian businesses and any citizen dealing with Syria or with Russian and Iranian entities in the country, are up for a five-year renewal this month.

On August 10, the Treasury Department sanctioned Hizballah for supporting the Syrian government on the basis of Executive Order 13582. "This action highlights Hizballah's activities within Syria and its integral role in the continued violence the Assad regime is inflicting on the Syrian population," the Treasury Department said in its formal announcement.
